What the Traveling Library Has Done for Elmer RY WILLIAM S. WATSON Elmer is a typical New Jersey town of-about eleven hundred inhabitants that serves as a center from which the farm-ers may get their supplies and ship their produce, and in which, after they have secured a competence, they may have a little home and spend the remainder of their days in peace and quietness. White potatoes are our main staple of production. Last summer we shipped six hundred and fourteen carloads of them. Three years and a half ago there was no free public library in Elmer. At that time it occurred to three of the public school teachers that it would be a good thing for the children if they could have a reading room in which to spend a part of their time in the evening, instead of running wild on the streets. The project was carried through, but money for its continued support has proved almost as scarce as hen s teeth, for the yearly subscriptions have barely paid for rent, lighting, and heating. Fortunately for us, however, the library had not been long in existence when a helping hand was extended from another direction and this is how it came about: A visiting state school official told the librarian that if he would write to Miss Sara B. Askew, organizer of the Public Library Commission, she would bring the resources of the state to his assistance. The...
