Not illustrated. 1916 Excerpt: . . . previously stated, these possibilities and advantages are to be adequately obtained only in some form or type of tooth which presents as much porcelain as possible, this porcelain not being weakened by the presence of metal pins, nor by the provisions for retention, and which, therefore, possesses a maximum of strength, which is of natural form, more or less universally applicable, and which will require but a minimum of grinding in effecting the desired and required adaptation. This latter feature, as applied to the retentive surface, is essential, because in proportion as a given form of porcelain tooth will require but little or no grinding upon this surface in effecting its adaptation to the requirements of the individual case, may it be expected to be replaceable or interchangeable. These combined advantages, I believe, are to be obtained in a form of tooth suggested by the writer and known as the Goslee Tooth. It will be observed that these teeth as now made are of natural form; that they possess the strength and color characteristic of the Consolidated tooth bodies; that they are adapted to single crown work where any form of metal base is used, as well as to intermediate teeth, or Dummies for bridgework; that they afford a minimum display of gold, and require but a minimum amount of grinding, and that with a sufficiently large variety of molds they should be almost universally applicable; also that they are strongest where the greatest strength is...
