Home Drug Infusion Therapy Under Medicare In many cases, smaller providers may offer only one or two components of the therapy directly. A patient from a small town who is on HDIT, for example, might receive infusion-related nursing from the local HHA, pharmacy products and serv-ices from the local pharmacy, and an infusion pump from the local medical equipment dealer. In fact, it appears that many HDIT providers contract with at least one other type of provider to provide some components of the therapy. Where patients need routine as well as infusion specialty nursing, the routine nursing is ah-nest always performed by a separate agency ( except where the HHA itself is also the primary home infusion provider ) ( see figure I-I ). The continually expanding revenues and, appar-ently, relatively high profit margins that have been enjoyed by the HDIT industry thus far have facili-tated and encouraged the entry of new providers...
